Now, the International Criminal Court is an independent, permanent court in Europe. It puts people accused of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes on trial. The International Criminal Court is supported by many countries, but not the United States government. Some people believe that the United States should help the International Criminal Court by sharing intelligence about genocide that would build its case against the government of Sudan's leaders, who are accused of planning and implementing the genocide.

Others believe that the United States should not help the International Criminal Court because there is some chance that, in the future, its prosecutors might try to prosecute the US military personnel for their actions in Iraq or in other military missions around the world. Which comes closer to your view?
